Subverting Hatred: The Challenge of Nonviolence in Religious Traditions

This book is a collection of essays written by representatives of nine world religions, each offering insights into the teachings of nonviolence within their tradition. The essays are divided into two sections: one focusing on the teachings of the religions themselves, and the other on the practical application of nonviolence.

The book is edited by Daniel L. Smith-Christopher, who is a professor of religious studies and the director of the Ikeda Center for Peace, Learning, and Leadership at Bard College.

The essays cover a range of topics, including the role of nonviolence in Confucianism, Daoism, Hinduism, Buddhism, Islam, Judaism, Christianity, and Jainism.

The book is part of the Faith Meets Faith series, which aims to promote interfaith understanding and dialogue.

Overall, Subverting Hatred is a valuable resource for those interested in the role of nonviolence in religious traditions, and for those seeking to understand the complexities of promoting peace through nonviolent means.
